Geographically positioned across the sea from South Korea, Shandong has long served as a key gateway for economic and trade exchanges between the two countries. More than 150 enterprises from both sides participated in this yearâ??s conference, engaging in project matchmaking and discussions on trade, investment and other areas of cooperation. At the event, representatives from Shandong and South Korea reviewed the substantial achievements made through cooperation, put forward proposals for strengthening practical collaboration, and outlined prospects for further deepening their partnership.

Shandong and South Korea enjoy a strong foundation for cooperation, complementary strengths and broad prospects for future development. As one of Chinaâ??s three designated locations for China-South Korea industrial parks, Yantai benefits from its geographical proximity, close cultural ties and longstanding business connections with South Korea. The city has established sister-city relationships with eight South Korean cities and has attracted more than 4,000 South Korean-invested projects, including investments by leading companies such as Hyundai Motor, HD Hyundai Heavy Industries, SK and Atomy.

At this yearâ??s event, 23 cooperation projects between Shandong and South Korea were signed, including 11 projects in Yantai, the highest number among all cities in the province. The projects span a range of sectors, including medical aesthetics, high-end equipment and intelligent manufacturing, cross-border e-commerce, and logistics.

At the ceremony, attending officials and guests jointly launched the series of events under Yantai South Korea Week. During the week, Yantai will host a range of parallel events and industrial park visits, including sister-city mayorsâ?? dialogue, China-South Korea science and technology matchmaking sessions, a youth football friendly match, promotional events showcasing cultural and tourism resources, and exchanges on innovation and entrepreneurship among young people from China and South Korea. Together, these activities will provide a multi-tiered, integrated platform for dialogue, exchange and business matchmaking.
